MAGNET IN SURGERY

Hunting Needle in Body is Now an Easy Matter.

Scientists Have Devised Scheme by Which Trouble of the Most Serious Character May Be Properly Dealt With.

When a needle has wandered around in the body, as needles so often do, and pain in some spot has aroused suspicion that it is the cause, the surgeon had to cut it out. This is not so easy as it may seem, because he does not want to make an unnecessarily large wound and he cannot find out the precise position of the needle until he reaches it.

Dr. J. H. Monks recently devised a method of finding the needle, which he describes in the Boston Medical and Surgical Journal. A powerful magnet is passed over the suspected spot. This magnetizes the buried needle. Then another, suspended from a fine silk thread, is passed over the same locality when the poles of the buried needle will attract unlike poles of the examining needle, causing the latter to swing around parallel to the axis of the buried needle, and if one pair of poles is nearer than the other there will be a corresponding dip of the examining needle, somewhat after the manner of the "divining rod."

It is astonishing how a needle that has been swallowed, as needles often are, will wander about in the body and perhaps after many months make its presence known by a sore spot.

The sea flashed in the sunlight and Mrs. James Wadham blinked her eyes and turned them toward the cooling green of the golf links.

Her glance sharpened as she recognized her husband's portly form. Mis face flamed with heat and his te clothes looked limp. Over one shoulder a bag of clubs sagged heavily.

"I wonder who that man is-he looks like the one who arrived this morning: I wonder if Edith-" Her thoughts became chaotic as her husband came up the steps and sank into chair beside her.

"Blistering hot, Meg," he puffed, opping his brow. Who is that man, Jim?" she asked.

What man?" he stared. The one you crossed the links ith-the tall man with fair bair."

"Ob-that's Denway." "One of the Denways?" she de-

He nodded carelessly. "One of the Denway twins, I beeves flashed. Her husband recognized the signs, saying with a tittle sigh: and smiled inwardly.

"They've got all kinds of money," he egged her on. "I know it-Jim. I've been thinking of Edith-you know she is too good for the best man on earth!" "Right-for that reason she'll probably marry some good-for-nothing + scamp who will expect me to support them both. I'm so sure of it that I'm for the purpose." "Jim, you're too absurd. Fancy a Denway expecting you to support him!"

"A Denway-hey? Say Meg, how long has Edith been acquainted with Reggie Denway?"

"I thought you said it was 'Cecil,' " she countered. "Well - Cecil - Reginald - any old names that suits you. How long has she known any of the Denways?" "Not at all-she has never met them." "Then why worry about my supporting him? I think women are the most eccentric critters on this footstool!" James Wacham beckoned to a hotel servant, and was presently served with two tall, cool glasses of orange juice. One of these he pushed across the table toward his wife.

He buried his aggressive nose in the

"Of course, James," said Mrs. Wadham imperturbably, "you will arrange for Edith to meet Mr. Denway-it's a chance in a lifetime. Cecil Denway is one of the richest men in the world married; he married one of the Evans 'Litiously ordered a few articles for Ignace Snattico."

Mrs. Wadham rattled off these names with great complacency. She knew her social blue book from cover to cover. Although not of the social set whose doings she watched from afar and envied, her husband's millons often brought his wife and daughter in touch with the charmed circle.

Mrs. Wadham's one object in life was to marry her daughter to someone within the magic circle. Edith's indifference to the project and her husband's open amusement at her repeated failures nettled her into greater action.

"Edith shall marry this Denway she said between her clenched teeth, and she fell into a brown study, planring, scheming, plotting to bring about the desired end.

With Edith married to Cecil Denway she would be a relative by marriage to the Countess Spattico, a Meg Wadham's social ambitions. Her husband's voice broke in on her thoughts. "I saw Dick Ainslee this morning and asked him what he was doing by embraced by Cecil Denway. She down here. Said he was private secretary to Denham."

Mrs Wadham shrugged impatient-"It does seem as though Dick Ainslee was always appearing in the most unexpected places. It will be very disagreeable for him, when Edith marries Mr. Denway to occupy a menial position in her household."

James Wadham grinned broadly. Search me! I didn't ask him. He did not tell his wife that when Seems to me I heard someone call him he had recognized Dick Ainslee on the beach a few hours ago Edith had "Cecil Denway!" Meg Wadham been with him. The memory of Edith's grew pink with excitement. Her black | face as she looked at Dick sealed her father's lips. But he could not help

> Money isn't everything, my dear. We used to be mighty happy before I struck oil"

"We're happy now," insisted Mrs. Wadbam, sternly Not for worlds would she have her husband suspect that she ever yearned for those old days in the middle Western town when their modest cottage was the social center and the Ladies' Aid society her setting aside a certain sum of money | highest form of social aspiration. gazing in rapt delight at the approaching form of Mr. Denway

There were those at the Harbor hotel who watched Mrs. Wadham's game with ill-concealed amusement. There were others-Edith, and Denway him self-who suffered from her constant supervision-her scheme to thrust Edith upon his notice.

Edith herself was in a state of revolt, but after a whispered conversation with her father the old smile came back to her face and her eyes

If it was just a game-why, it was time that dear, foolish mother was checkmated.

So Edith danced and rode and golfed and boated with the rich Mr. Denway -it proved to be Cecil-and Mrs. and above the ordinary in character. | Wadham nodded and smiled and scrib-The other Denway twin, Reggie, is bled long lists and even surrep-

"I don't see how any sensible girl could help loving a Denway," she retorted, and was afterward angry at the silly remark.

Just when her hopes were at pinnacle point-they fell with a crash.

It all happened at once. Edith had been missing all afternoon and Cecii Denway had mooned around the piazzas, reading the papers and yawning in a bored way. He didn't seem a bit interested when Mrs. adham cornered him and began to talk about Edith It was in the midst of a maternal eulogy of the sweetest daughter in triumph indeed over the old ac- the world that Mr. Denway leaped quaintancs who looked askance upon from his seat with a word of apology and rushed down the steps to meet a large motor car. From the motor car descended a very pretty woman, who was ardentwas followed by four charming chilpresume?" said Mrs. Wadham to her nearest neighbor.

But that dowager only smiled wickedly.

"Oh, no, his wife. She was one of the Evans girls. Reggie isn't married yet, though his engagement has just been announced. He's been spending the summer in Europe, you know.

Mrs. Wadham didn't know-she felt In that instant that she didn't know anything. Never again would she trust that false prophet, the blue book.

Her husband discovered her in their sitting room, the fatal book open on her lap. The page of Denways was blistered with tears.

"My dear," he said, gently, "Edith is outside-with Dick Ainslee. They want to marry each other: I'm going to boost Dick and-I told Edith that of course you wanted her to marry the man she loved."

"Of course I do!" Mrs. Wadham smiled through her tears. "Tell them to come right in-and Jim-just throw this book in the fire!"

And she gave her husband the prized blue book.

Why should she keep it when Edith had flouted the social register and was marrying the man she loved?

"I'm very glad after all," she sighed, and she meant it.

I want to set in juxtaposition to this statement one equally as extreme from a farmer:

"Educationally we need hardly anything more than the general use of an arithmetic giving practical attention to farm problems. It is nothing less than disgraceful to have thousands and thousands of farm boys year after year studying problems in bank ex-change, latitude and longitude, British money, and the metric system of weights and measures, while they learn absolutely nothing about how to com-pound a fertilizer formula, estimate the values of different grades of fertilizer, nor have any problems in mixing rations for livestock. Pittsburgh Man Able to Make Vibra tions Radiated by Flame Reproduce Every Note Played Upon Pipe Organ.

Albert J. Pyne, a Pittsburgh business man, has perfected, after years of vibrations radiated by the flame from a tiny gas get reproduce every note played upon a pipe organ. The device well be called a pyrophone. It differs little in principle from a pipe organ, except that the vibrant note is caused by a flame instead of a current of air upon a reed.

In recent tests in his laboratory Mr. invention with a single unit, or octave, and is perfecting it for a public demonstration before a party of scientists and musicians. The inventor does not claim that he has discovered anything particularly new to science or that the instrument will in itself become of widespread utility. Like Franklin's experiment with the kite, however, many persons believe that the application of the principle of the invention will lead eventually to the reproduction of sound from a ray of To do this you must, first, recognize light. Light flashed upon a screen will, they say, be made to give forth tone modulations-music-as well as a diversity of color small and possesses too little quality of vibration to satisfy the novice Take instead a burner of brass about two inches wide, like those on gasoline lamps. This is supplied from a quarter-inch pipe.

The supply of gas is registered by an ordinary screw valve, and a key between this valve and the burner cortrois the length of the note. Beside the aperture of the burner, which is about 1-32 of an inch wide, is a master light, which burns constantly to ignite the gas when the note is struck. The inside measurement of the pipe supplying the master light is of an inch in diameter.

Over the burner and master light a tin tube four feet long and four inches in diameter is suspended in a manner that will allow it to vibrate freely. The adjustment of the tube is similar to that of the pipes of an organ. The burner is placed about one-fourth of the distance from the bottom of the tube, and the perfection of the note is obtained by raising or lowering the tube until the instrument is considered in proper "tune."

To make a single unit capable of playing music in a single octave seven other tubes are required of the same diameter, but graduated in length up to eight feet or down to two feet. In this demonstration Mr. Pyne expects to operate such an instrument with

To obtain the best results he probably will use oxygen from a tank, but in simple experiments the broad burner can be affixed to an ordinary gas pipe after removing the nipple, and the tube can be suspended over it in er Fred W. Davis, "must meet the the manner indicated without the mas-

On Good Work of the Farmers' Union

For years the Farmers' Union has endeavored to bring about a cotton warehouse and marketing system. Their slogan has been co-operation and education. Those familiar with the work of that organization know that its members are in hearty accord with the movement to build warehouses. They have been building warehouses for years past. But they also know that it is going to take organization and persistent energetic effort to induce the people to hold cotton in the warehouses. It can only become a reality by showing the benefits to be derived. The farmer must be convinced that the expense of housing and holding his cotton plus the interest he is compelled to pay for money borrowed to tide him over, is not in excess of the probable increase in the price of cotton during the same period. The farmer cannot afford to speculate. He must play the safe game. His big brother in business must manifest a true spirit of co-operation; that is, he must do as he expects of the farmer. He must make some sacrifice when it comes to cotton. He must assist in building warehouses without expecting to make money from their operation. Then, too, he must assist in getting the lowest possible interest rate on cotton as collateral, if stored in these warehouses.

It would seem that a receipt issued under this law furnishes all the safe guards necessary. The banks have approved it, hence there are no objections except such as may be raised by the grower, the ginner and the warehouse man I shall not attempt in this article to answer the objections which have been raised. I do not believe the three samples which must not exceed 51.3 ounces each, or a total of one pound, would exceed the amount taken out of the bale under the present sampling method, without taking into consideration the bale under the present same state of the benefit which comes to the grower and buyer from being able to get a fair correct sample and having the cotton completely covered. Indeed, the three samples taken are not lost to the buyer. One of them must be preserved by the ginner and eventually sold for the credit of the owner and the other two samples are given to the owner, one of which he must deposit with the cotton if stored and the other to be used by him as he sees fit.

It may be admitted that some extra expense over present methods is on casioned by the better wrapping and the sampling but this should not exceed fifty cents per bale. It is worth fifty cents per bale for the grower to have s bonded sample if he never uses it except for street sales; because under present methods his cotton is not only cut and disfigured, causing some less from bad order, but he is at the mercy of the man who takes the sample and declares the grade

The reason Foiey Kidney Filis act so satisfactorily is because they neutralize and dissolve the poisonous waste matter that remains in the blood because the kidneys do not do their work properly in filtering and casting out from the system uric acid and other poisons.

Relief usually follows in a few days and such symptoms as pain in the sides or back, stiff joints, sore muscles, rheumatism, too frequent action of the bladder at night, and other painful and annoying allments disappear. Foley Kidney Filis contain no harmful ingredients. They are safe as well as quick acting.
